INTRODUCTION

This teaching and learning guide is aimed at organizing the educational process on the course of philosophy of law, as well as can help students in their own study of this discipline.

This guide is designed to organize the educational process for the Philosophy of Law course and to assist students in their self-study of the discipline.

The philosophy of law is an independent legal discipline of a general legal nature. Like other legal disciplines, the philosophy of law studies the law and the state in their relationship and conceptual-legal unity.

Philosophical and legal studies have made a great contribution to the formation and development of the legal and political culture of humanity, civil society and the rule of law. Hence the fundamental importance of the philosophy of law in the system of legal and general humanitarian education. The philosophy of law is the cognitive basis of the entire system of legal sciences. It complements such disciplines as «General history of the state and law», «History of political and legal teachings», «History of the state and law of Kyrgyzstan», «Theory of the state and law» and others, and also allows to form a holistic view of theoretical jurisprudence.

Philosophy of law is studied by students, undergraduates during the semester, at the end of which an examination or a score is taken (on credit are given questions considered in lectures and during self-study students).

The examination or the score is the final form of the discipline's knowledge control. For this discipline, the writing of a paper is provided, in subsequent courses it is possible to choose and prepare the final qualification work.

PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES OF DISCIPLINE

The aim of the guide is philosophical comprehension of the most general regularities of legal phenomena in organic unity with the essence of man, various aspects of his social existence.
